The Great Fire of London

THE LONDON GAZETTE – THURSDAY 6TH SEPTEMBER 1666

Shortly after midnight last Sunday morning, a great tragedy struck our much loved capital city. Sparks from an oven started a small fire in the baker's shop owned by Thomas Farriner in Pudding Lane. It quickly swept into neighbouring buildings. The fierce flames from the blaze were blown by a strong easterly wind and set alight the dry timbers of the inn in Fish Street Hill, engulfing the stables and the straw within. The fire soon became a major conflagration racing through the narrow streets of the city destroying both houses and churches in its path. The great storehouses on the banks of the Thames were quickly caught by the blaze, and huge clouds of smoke and soot hung over the city and it was difficult to breathe. Even rats fled from the burning buildings by jumping into the River Thames!

There are no firebreaks so our brave citizens formed human chains to fight the flames with buckets of water. But this was futile for the heat was overwhelming and the fire quickly spread to the west. Many people were seen fleeing the flames with all their possessions and family tossed into hand carts, while others just raced away screaming with fear and fright. Our ferrymen rowed many unfortunate victims to the other side of the river or further upstream to escape the flames, risking their precious lives into the bargain. It is said that even the river water was burning red!

By Tuesday the fire had spread over most of the city and both St. Paul's Cathedral and the Guildhouse have been burned. After the fires had raged for three days, desperate action had to be taken. King Charles and his brother James, Duke of York came to view the devastation, and our Mayor has now ordered that some houses be blown up by the use of gunpowder. Hopefully these firebreaks will help limit the firestorm spreading to the Palace of Whitehall. Our city has lost 87 parish churches, and 13,200 homes have been consumed. Many of our good citizens who have lost their homes are camping outside the city walls. It is provident that the weather is mild or their plight would be much worse. We must learn from this disaster, and future homes must be built of bricks and stone and London's streets must be made wider.

Most of the old City of London had to be totally rebuilt. Christopher Wren was the principal architect of this new City. The magnificent dome of his St Paul's Cathedral still stands proudly over the wide streets and stone buildings. Not even the Blitz of 1940 could destroy it.

Write these sentences in the right order:

A The great storehouses by the Thames were soon engulfed.
B In future, homes were to be built of stone and brick and the streets would be wider.
C The fire started in a baker's shop in Pudding Lane and spread quickly.
D The King and his brother came to view the devastation.
E The people fled their homes and even the rats had to jump into the Thames.
F By Tuesday, thousands of houses, many churches and even St. Paul's Cathedral were destroyed.
G The Mayor ordered firebreaks to be created by blowing up buildings.
