Spelling Patterns

ch spelling pattern

1. Learn the words first. Make sure you know what each word means.
2. Test yourself by writing down each word correctly in the first column. Go over any mistakes.
3. Get someone to test you and write your answers in the second column. Go over any mistakes.

Look/Learn/Cover	Write/Check 1	Write/Check 2
c h r o n i c
c h r o n i c l e
c h e m i s t r y
C h r i s t m a s
c h o r d
c h o i r
c h o r u s c h o r i s t e r
c h a o s
c h a s m
c h a r a c t e r
c h a o t i c
c h o r a l
o r c h i d o r c h e s t r a
a c h e
s c h o o l
a r c h i t e c t
e c h o
a n c h o r
m o n a r c h y
s c h e m e
s t o m a c h
m e c h a n i c
t e c h n o l o g y
t e c h n i c a l

Spelling Pattern Exercises

ch spelling pattern

1. You should know these words. If you make any mistakes please go over them to ensure your learning is secure.
2. These exercises are designed to test the spellings you have learnt, check your understanding and further enhance your vocabulary.

Exercise 1 – CLOZE test.

Fill in the missing letters to make the correct words.

The Choral Concert

It was approaching _ _ r i s t m a s, and the school _ _ o i r was in the hall for the final rehearsal. The _ _ o r u s was lined up behind the o r _ _ e s t _ a, which had just finished tuning up. All was calm and quiet and everybody was waiting for the opening _ _ o r d. Someone was missing. Where was the conductor? It would be _ _ a o t _ c without him because he was the _ _ o i r ' s a n _ _ o _.
Hurrying footsteps e _ _ o e d down the long corridor, and into the hall stumbled the conductor, red-faced. He apologised to everyone, blaming a 'slight t e _ _ n _ c _ l hitch'. Actually he had woken up with a painful s _ o _ a _ _ _ _ h e and there had been a long queue at the _ _ e m _ _ t 's shop on the way to s _ _ o _ l.
Feeling better now, he stood in front of the o r _ _ e s _ _ a and took up his baton.
_ _ a o s had been averted by a little dose of medicine.

Exercise 2 – The words on the left are opposites of the words on the right. Complete the words on the right.

calm c _ a _ s temporary _ h r _ n _ _

Exercise 3 – Use the clue to help you unravel the letters and find the word.

1. d o h r c Played on a musical instrument _____
2. i d c r h o You might find this in your garden _____
3. o c h e You might hear this in a cave _____
4. r o n h a c Boats have these _____
5. r i o h c A group of people singing _____

Exercise 4 – CLOZE sentences. Fill in the missing letters to complete each sentence.

1. After working out in the gym the man had back _ c h _.
2. They went to hear the o _ c h _ _ t _ _ play.
3. They took their car to the m _ _ h _ n i _.
4. The company updated their t _ c _ n _ l _ g _.
5. She liked that c _ a r _ _ _ e r in the book.

Homophones

Some words are pronounced like other words
but are different in spelling and meaning, e.g. rode and road

Tick off each word as you learn it please.

Buy	To acquire possession of
Bye	Informed goodbye, win a tournament round when there's no opponent
Fair	Free from bias, a light hair colour
Fare	The price of a journey in a train or taxi, food
Lain	Past of lay, he had lain down
Lane	A narrow road
Missed	Failed to hit
Mist	Like a cloud near the ground but lighter than fog
None	No one, not one, not any
Nun	A female version of a monk
Pause	To stop for a moment
Paws	The foot of an animal
Plum	A fruit, often red or dark pink, with an oblong stone
Plumb	Perpendicular – a plumb line
Road	A stretch of smooth or paved surface typically used by motor vehicles
Rode	Past tense of ride – she rode her horse
Role	A part or character played by an actor in a play or film
Roll	To move along a surface by turning
Told	Past tense of tell – I was told to wait here
Tolled	The past tense of toll, involving the ringing of a bell – The bells tolled

Choose the correct word from the pair to complete each sentence.

1. The whole class went to the _____ for an outing. fair fare
2. The _____ jam was delicious. plumb plum
3. I couldn't see the field because of the _____ . mist missed
4. The game was won on the last _____ of the dice. role roll
5. The bell in church _____ for a long time. tolled told
6. There was a dent where he had _____ . lane lain
7. She told him she wanted _____ of it. nun none
8. She took a long _____ before the jump. pause paws

To complete each sentence below you need a pair of words from the list. Be sure to put each word in the right place.

9. He waved his mother _____ and went to _____ some milk.

10. He _____ his bicycle down the winding _____ .

You should learn these off by heart.

Opposites 6 - Revision

You have learnt these harder words now do the following exercises.

What is the opposite of there? _____

What is the opposite of hero? _____

What is the opposite of hide? _____

What is the opposite of knowledgeable? _____

Re-write these sentences using the opposite of the word in bold.

He pleaded guilty to the charge.

The box of books was very heavy.

The chocolate egg was hollow.

The boy felt very proud.

The inside of the cave was immense.

Fill in the gaps on the right to find the opposite of the word on the left.

past	f _____e
senior	j _ _ io _
maximum	m_____ m _ m

SCORE:

If you didn't get them all correct please revise Opposites 6.

M. Millie Canto's school work for marking.

Our elderley neighbor is a collecter of garden nomes which he puts in his front garden. One is fishing in his pond and another is sitting on a enormous taodstool. One knome in green welington boots pushes a wheelbarow, but most of them just stand there. One night last week their was a wild gale blowing. In the morning his garden was a disarster, like the Battle of hastings. There was bodies all over the plaice. One of them had his head nocked off and another had lost a leg at the gnee. Two gnomes got blowen against each other so they looked like they was wresteling. His garden was a reck so I helped the old man tidy it up.

How many mistakes in spelling or grammar did you spot?

Paired reading (Short Story 3): The Cost of Kindness by Jerome K. Jerome

THE COST OF KINDNESS-

This is a complete short story originally published in The Strand Magazine (1906)

"Kindness," argued little Mrs. Pennycoop, "costs nothing."

"And, speaking generally, my dear, is valued precisely at cost price," retorted Mr. Pennycoop, who, as an auctioneer of twenty years' experience, had enjoyed much opportunity of testing the attitude of the public towards sentiment.

"I don't care what you say, George," persisted his wife; "he may be a disagreeable, cantankerous old brute—I don't say he isn't. All the same, the man is going away, and we may never see him again."

"If I thought there was any fear of our doing so," observed Mr. Pennycoop, "I'd turn my back on the Church of England to-morrow and become a Methodist."

"Don't talk like that, George," his wife admonished him, reprovingly; "the Lord might be listening to you."

"If the Lord had to listen to old Cracklethorpe He'd sympathize with me," was the opinion of Mr. Pennycoop.

"The Lord sends us our trials, and they are meant for our good," explained his wife. "They are meant to teach us patience."

"You are not churchwarden," retorted her husband; "you can get away from him. You hear him when he is in the pulpit, where, to a certain extent, he is bound to keep his temper."

"You forget the rummage sale, George," Mrs. Pennycoop reminded him; "to say nothing of the church decorations."

"The rummage sale," Mr. Pennycoop pointed out to her, "occurs only once a year, and at that time your own temper, I have noticed—"

"I always try to remember I am a Christian," interrupted little Mrs. Pennycoop. "I do not pretend to be a saint, but whatever I say I am always sorry for it afterwards—you know I am, George."

"It's what I am saying," explained her husband. "A vicar who has contrived in three years to make every member of his congregation hate the very sight of a church—well, there's something wrong about it somewhere."

Mrs. Pennycoop, gentlest of little women, laid her plump and still pretty hands upon her husband's shoulders. "Don't think, dear, I haven't sympathised with you. You have borne it nobly. I have marvelled sometimes that you have been able to control yourself as you have done, most times; the things that he has said to you."

Mr. Pennycoop had slid unconsciously into an attitude suggestive of petrified virtue, lately discovered.

"One's own poor self," observed Mr. Pennycoop, in accents of proud humility—"insults that are merely personal one can put up with. Though even there," added the senior churchwarden, with momentary descent towards the plane of human nature, "nobody cares to have it hinted publicly across the vestry table that one has chosen to collect from the left side for the express purpose of artfully passing over one's own family."

"The children have always had their three-penny-bits ready waiting in their hands," explained Mrs. Pennycoop, indignantly.

"It's the sort of thing he says merely for the sake of making a disturbance," continued the senior churchwarden. "It's the things he does I draw the line at."

"The things he has done, you mean, dear," laughed the little woman, with the accent on the "has." "It is all over now, and we are going to be rid of him. I expect, dear, if we only knew, we should find it was his liver. You know, George, I remarked to you the first day that he came how pasty he looked and what a singularly unpleasant mouth he had. People can't help these things, you know, dear. One should look upon them in the light of afflictions and be sorry for them."

"I could forgive him doing what he does if he didn't seem to enjoy it," said the senior churchwarden. "But, as you say, dear, he is going, and all I hope and pray is that we never see his like again."

"And you'll come with me to call upon him, George," urged kind little Mrs. Pennycoop. "After all, he has been our vicar for three years, and he must be feeling it, poor man—whatever he may pretend—going away like this, knowing that everybody is glad to see the back of him."

"Well, I sha'n't say anything I don't really feel," stipulated Mr. Pennycoop.

"That will be all right, dear," laughed his wife, "so long as you don't say what you do feel. And we'll both of us keep our temper," further suggested the little woman, "whatever happens. Remember, it will be for the last time."

Little Mrs. Pennycoop's intention was kind and Christianlike. The Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe would be quitting Wychwood-on-the-Heath the following Monday, never to set foot—so the Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe himself and every single member of his congregation hoped sincerely—in the neighbourhood again.

Hitherto no pains had been taken on either side to disguise the mutual joy with which the parting was looked forward to. The Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe, M.A., might possibly have been of service to his Church in, say, some East-end parish of unsavoury reputation, some mission station far advanced amid the hordes of heathendom. There his inborn instinct of antagonism to everybody and everything surrounding him, his unconquerable disregard for other people's views and feelings, his inspired conviction that everybody but himself was bound to be always wrong about everything, combined with determination to act and speak fearlessly in such belief, might have found their uses. In picturesque little Wychwood-on-the-Heath, among the Kentish hills, retreat beloved of the retired tradesman, the spinster of moderate means, the reformed Bohemian developing latent instincts towards respectability, these qualities made only for scandal and disunion.

For the past two years the Rev. Cracklethorpe's parishioners, assisted by such other of the inhabitants of Wychwood-on-the-Heath as had happened to come into personal contact with the reverend gentleman, had sought to impress upon him, by hints and innuendoes difficult to misunderstand, their cordial and daily-increasing dislike of him, both as a parson and a man. Matters had come to a head by the determination officially announced to him that, failing other alternatives, a deputation of his leading parishioners would wait upon his bishop. This it was that had brought it home to the Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe that, as the spiritual guide and comforter of Wychwood-on-the Heath, he had proved a failure. The Rev. Augustus had sought and secured the care of other souls. The following Sunday morning he had arranged to preach his farewell sermon, and the occasion promised to be a success from every point of view. Churchgoers who had not visited St. Jude's for months had promised themselves the luxury of feeling they were listening to the Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe for the last time. The Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe had prepared a sermon that for plain speaking and directness was likely to leave an impression. The parishioners of St. Jude's, Wychwood-on-the- Heath, had their failings, as we all have. The Rev. Augustus flattered himself that he had not missed out a single one, and was looking forward with pleasurable anticipation to the sensation that his remarks, from his "firstly" to his "sixthly and lastly," were likely to create.

What marred the entire business was the impulsiveness of little Mrs. Pennycoop. The Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe, informed in his study on the Wednesday afternoon that Mr. and Mrs. Pennycoop had called, entered the drawing-room a quarter of an hour later, cold and severe; and, without offering to shake hands, requested to be informed as shortly as possible for what purpose he had been disturbed. Mrs. Pennycoop had had her speech ready to her tongue. It was just what it should have been, and no more.

It referred casually, without insisting on the point, to the duty incumbent upon all of us to remember on occasion we were Christians; that our privilege it was to forgive and forget; that, generally speaking, there are faults on both sides; that partings should never take place in anger; in short, that little Mrs. Pennycoop and George, her husband, as he was waiting to say for himself, were sorry for everything and anything they may have said or done in the past to hurt the feelings of the Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe, and would like to shake hands with him and wish him every happiness for the future. The chilling attitude of the Rev. Augustus scattered that carefully-rehearsed speech to the winds. It left Mrs. Pennycoop nothing but to retire in choking silence, or to fling herself upon the inspiration of the moment and make up something new. She choose the latter alternative.

At first the words came halting. Her husband, man-like, had deserted her in her hour of utmost need and was fumbling with the door-knob. The steely stare with which the Rev. Cracklethorpe regarded her, instead of chilling her, acted upon her as a spur. It put her on her mettle. He should listen to her. She would make him understand her kindly feeling towards him if she had to take him by the shoulders and shake it into him. At the end of five minutes the Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe, without knowing it, was looking pleased. At the end of another five Mrs. Pennycoop stopped, not for want of words, but for want of breath. The Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe replied in a voice that, to his own surprise, was trembling with emotion. Mrs. Pennycoop had made his task harder for him. He had thought to leave Wychwood-on-the-Heath without a regret. The knowledge he now possessed, that at all events one member of his congregation understood him, as Mrs. Pennycoop had proved to him she understood him, sympathised with him— the knowledge that at least one heart, and that heart Mrs. Pennycoop's, had warmed to him, would transform what he had looked forward to as a blessed relief into a lasting grief.

Mr. Pennycoop, carried away by his wife's eloquence, added a few halting words of his own. It appeared from Mr. Pennycoop's remarks that he had always regarded the Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe as the vicar of his dreams, but misunderstandings in some unaccountable way will arise. The Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe, it appeared, had always secretly respected Mr. Pennycoop. If at any time his spoken words might have conveyed the contrary impression, that must have arisen from the poverty of our language, which does not lend itself to subtle meanings.

Then following the suggestion of tea, Miss Cracklethorpe, sister to the Rev. Augustus—a lady whose likeness to her brother in all respects was startling, the only difference between them being that while he was clean-shaven she wore a slight moustache—was called down to grace the board. The visit was ended by Mrs. Pennycoop's remembrance that it was Wilhelmina's night for a hot bath.

"I said more than I intended to," admitted Mrs. Pennycoop to George, her husband, on the way home; "but he irritated me."

Rumour of the Pennycoops' visit flew through the parish. Other ladies felt it their duty to show to Mrs. Pennycoop that she was not the only Christian in Wychwood-on-the-Heath. Mrs. Pennycoop, it was feared, might be getting a swelled head over this matter. The Rev. Augustus, with pardonable pride, repeated some of the things that Mrs. Pennycoop had said to him. Mrs. Pennycoop was not to imagine herself the only person in Wychwood-on-the-Heath capable of generosity that cost nothing. Other ladies could say graceful nothings—could say them even better. Husbands dressed in their best clothes and carefully rehearsed were brought in to grace the almost endless procession of disconsolate parishioners hammering at the door of St. Jude's parsonage. Between Thursday morning and Saturday night the Rev. Augustus, much to his own astonishment, had been forced to the conclusion that five-sixths of his parishioners had loved him from the first without hitherto having had opportunity of expressing their real feelings.

The eventful Sunday arrived. The Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe had been kept so busy listening to regrets at his departure, assurances of an esteem hitherto disguised from him, explanations of seeming discourtesies that had been intended as tokens of affectionate regard, that no time had been left to him to think of other matters. Not till he entered the vestry at five minutes to eleven did recollection of his farewell sermon come to him. It haunted him throughout the service. To deliver it after the revelations of the last three days would be impossible. It was the sermon that Moses might have preached to Pharaoh the Sunday prior to the exodus. To crush with it this congregation of broken-hearted adorers sorrowing for his departure would be inhuman. The Rev. Augustus tried to think of passages that might be selected, altered. There were none. From beginning to end it contained not a single sentence capable of being made to sound pleasant by any ingenuity whatsoever.

The Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe climbed slowly up the pulpit steps without an idea in his head of what he was going to say. The sunlight fell upon the upturned faces of a crowd that filled every corner of the church. So happy, so buoyant a congregation the eyes of the Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe had never till that day looked down upon. The feeling came to him that he did not want to leave them. That they did not wish him to go, could he doubt? Only by regarding them as a collection of the most shameless hypocrites ever gathered together under one roof.

The Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe dismissed the passing suspicion as a suggestion of the Evil One, folded the neatly-written manuscript that lay before him on the desk, and put it aside. He had no need of a farewell sermon. The arrangements made could easily be altered. The Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe spoke from his pulpit for the first time an impromptu.

The Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe wished to acknowledge himself in the wrong. Foolishly founding his judgment upon the evidence of a few men, whose names there would be no need to mention, members of the congregation who, he hoped, would one day be sorry for the misunderstandings they had caused, brethren whom it was his duty to forgive, he had assumed the parishioners of St. Jude's, Wychwood-on-the-Heath, to have taken a personal dislike to him. He wished to publicly apologize for the injustice he had unwittingly done to their heads and to their hearts. He now had it from their own lips that a libel had been put upon them. So far from their wishing his departure, it was self-evident that his going would inflict upon them a great sorrow. With the knowledge he now possessed of the respect—one might almost say the veneration—with which the majority of that congregation regarded him—knowledge, he admitted, acquired somewhat late—it was clear to him he could still be of help to them in their spiritual need. To leave a flock so devoted would stamp him as an unworthy shepherd. The ceaseless stream of regrets at his departure that had been poured into his ear during the last four days he had decided at the last moment to pay heed to. He would remain with them—on one condition.

There quivered across the sea of humanity below him a movement that might have suggested to a more observant watcher the convulsive clutchings of some drowning man at some chance straw. But the Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe was thinking of himself.

The parish was large and he was no longer a young man. Let them provide him with a conscientious and energetic curate. He had such a one in his mind's eye, a near relation of his own, who, for a small stipend that was hardly worth mentioning, would, he knew it for a fact, accept the post. The pulpit was not the place in which to discuss these matters, but in the vestry afterwards he would be pleased to meet such members of the congregation as might choose to stay.

The question agitating the majority of the congregation during the singing of the hymn was the time it would take them to get outside the church. There still remained a faint hope that the Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe, not obtaining his curate, might consider it due to his own dignity to shake from his feet the dust of a parish generous in sentiment, but obstinately close-fisted when it came to putting its hands into its pockets.

But for the parishioners of St. Jude's that Sunday was a day of misfortune. Before there could be any thought of moving, the Rev. Augustus raised his surpliced arm and begged leave to acquaint them with the contents of a short note that had just been handed up to him. It would send them all home, he felt sure, with joy and thankfulness in their hearts. An example of Christian benevolence was among them that did honour to the Church.

Here a retired wholesale clothier from the East-end of London—a short, tubby gentleman who had recently taken the Manor House—was observed to turn scarlet.

A gentleman hitherto unknown to them had signalled his advent among them by an act of munificence that should prove a shining example to all rich men. Mr. Horatio Copper—the reverend gentleman found some difficulty, apparently, in deciphering the name.

"Cooper-Smith, sir, with an hyphen," came in a thin whisper, the voice of the still scarlet-faced clothier.

Mr. Horatio Cooper-Smith, taking—the Rev. Augustus felt confident—a not unworthy means of grappling to himself thus early the hearts of his fellow-townsmen, had expressed his desire to pay for the expense of a curate entirely out of his own pocket. Under these circumstances, there would be no further talk of a farewell between the Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe and his parishioners. It would be the hope of the Rev. Augustus Cracklethorpe to live and die the pastor of St. Jude's.

A more solemn-looking, sober congregation than the congregation that emerged that Sunday morning from St. Jude's in Wychwood-on-the-Heath had never, perhaps, passed out of a church door.

"He'll have more time upon his hands," said Mr. Biles, retired wholesale ironmonger and junior churchwarden, to Mrs. Biles, turning the corner of Acacia Avenue—"he'll have more time to make himself a curse and a stumbling-block."

"And if this 'near relation' of his is anything like him—"

"Which you may depend upon it is the Case, or he'd never have thought of him," was the opinion of Mr. Biles.

"I shall give that Mrs. Pennycoop," said Mrs. Biles, "a piece of my mind when I meet her."

But of what use was that?

-Please answer the questions on the following page-

Questions

The following words are all underlined in the text above:

Reputation Privilege Afflictions Affectionate

Petrified Determination Sympathised

Contrived Subtle

Misunderstand

Impulsive Acquired

Stipulated

Eloquence Ceaseless

Unconquerable Ingenuity

1) In the boxes labelled A-E, write down a word from the box above which correctly matches the following definitions

A		This means something is precise or indirect
B		The quality of having a modest or low view of your importance
C		Constant or unending
D		Deliberate rather than spontaneous or natural
E		Fluent or persuasive speaking or writing

2) Using the clues given, unscramble the following anagrams to find a word from the box above

A) unableconquer

Clue: This means something is impossible to overcome or defeat

B) sofainflict

Clue: This word means a cause of pain or harm

C) ivieslump

Clue: Synonyms for this word include: hasty, passionate and spontaneous

D) racequid

Clue: This word means you have bought or obtained something

E) platedsuit

Clue: This word means to demand or specify something

3) For the following five sentences, pick a word from the box above to complete the sentence so that it makes sense.

Annie's _____ would ensure that she got the grades she needed to go to university.

Finn believed it was a _____ to be selected as the new rugby captain.

The children waited with _____ for Santa's arrival.

The boy gave the dog an _____ pat for being obedient.

John _____ with his friend as he knew what it felt like to lose the game.

4) The following sentences all have a gap, choose a word from the box to fill the gap in each sentence. Write the sentence out correctly.

a) The King's meant that he was still undefeated.

b) The battle was as neither army would stop fighting.

c) The woman's voice was very easy to .

b) The young boy was of snakes.

b) The man had a of being scary.

Crossword Revision Puzzle

- This exercise uses words you have recently learnt.
- Use the clues to help you sort the letters out to find the answer.
- If you are not sure of a word (spelling or meaning) add it to your own personal vocabulary list.

Question	Clue	Answer
1. clonerich	An account of historical events written in the order in which they occurred.
2. dcorh	A group of notes played together.
3. chicoat	A situation that is disorganised.
4. each	A pain in part of your body.
5. unaidedtoi	You performed to try and secure a role.
6. ledlot	To charge a fee for using a bridge.
7. pervadeoat	What happens to water when the sun is out.
8. quietsmoos	Winged insects that often bite people.
9. apronsso	The highest singing voices.
10. invertedsteam	Pictures and words that try to persuade you to buy something.
11. hasinfo	Similar to style.
12. padreape	To come into sight.
13. earlsi	One after another. Sounds like cereal.
14. qchuee	A way of transferring money to someone.
15. moosetat	Red or yellow fruit that people often call a vegetable.

You have recently learnt all these words. Use the clues to solve the puzzle. Please revise any you are not sure of.

Crossword Revision Puzzle

Clues down

1. When there is lots of disorder.
2. A person who fixes things.
3. A metal object that holds a ship in place.
4. Acting in a way that makes people wonder what you are doing.
5. A person who designs buildings.
9. Doing something on purpose.
12. A type of science.
15. A group of musicians.
17. Something that is long-term, perhaps an illness.

Clues across

6. Electrical equipment.
7. An organ that holds your food.
8. The ringing of bells.
10. A plan of action.
11. Specific detail about something.
12. A leader of a choir.
13. A line of people waiting for something.
14. The rulers of a country.
16. A type of flower.
17. An event where music is played.
18. A deep opening in the earth's surface.

CR/20

VERBAL REASONING TEST 5

Marks

1. Inside the brackets write the letter which will end the first word and begin the second.

   F E R (.....) E C K .....

2. Complete this analogy.

   RICH is to POOR as ANCIENT is to ....

3. Underline the word which can be made from some or all of the letters of the word MEASURED, using each letter not more than once.

   MURDER RANDOM ARDOUR DREAMS ASSURED .....

4. If the first two vowels were omitted from the alphabet which would be the sixth letter? ....

5. Write one word to continue this series.

   masthead, am silent, is sunshine, ...

6. Write the next two pairs of letters in this series.

   RP SQ TR US VT ....

7. Write the three consecutive letters in the word INDEFINITELY which are also consecutive in the alphabetical. .....

8. Inside the brackets write the word of four letters which will complete all five words.

   . . . . step . . . . man . . . . mat . . . . way . . . . stop (. . . .) .....

9. Underline the two words below which are opposite in meaning:

   thoughtful generous proud honest selfish .....

10. In a certain code WRHAVD stands for PARSON. What would APRONS be in the same code? .....

    (.....)

11. Underline the word which does not fit in with the others.

    Hammer drill hacksaw ladder pliers screwdriver .....

12. Write the four letter word which has both these meanings. .....

    (a) courageous, fearless
    (b) eye-catching, prominent, striking (.....)

13. If 4353683 means DESERVE, then 836535 means ....

Marks

14. Underline the word which is similar in meaning to the word in capitals.

VALOUR cowardice laziness glamour bravery pride .....

15. Inside the brackets, write the word which will finish the unfinished word.

To pro_____ is to object to or complain about something .....

(.....)

16 Write the word which cannot be made from some or all of the letters in the word MYSTERIOUS, using each letter not more than once.

SISTER STORES MOISTURE TIMOROUS RUSTY (.....) .....

17. In the sentence below, five consecutive letters spell a word meaning 'of little value'. Write this word inside the brackets.

.....

As he listened to the soothing music he appeared to sleep (.....)

18. Rearrange the letters of the word in capitals to form a word corresponding to the given meaning.

PISTOL: Having damaged or ruined something. (.....) .....

19. Rearrange the first four letters of the word DESIGN so that they form a word

(.....) .....

20. The same three letters are in all the words below. Make a word from them.
LIFETIME FICTION AFFECTING MASTIFF FLOATING

(.....) .....

21. On the dotted line write the word which completes the sentence and which rhymes with the word in capitals

NEW: From her window there was a delightful ..... of the lake .....

22. Underline the two words which should change places in order that the sentence below should be correct.

Many people think that the early worm catches the bird. .....

23. Notice how the second word of each pair is formed from the first, then write the missing word.

cinder, cider passenger, pager flavour, ...

24. In the space write the missing word, which is formed by rearranging the letters of the word underlined.

The mechanic agrees that he smeared too much ..... on the engine. .....

25. Form a word from the letters which remain after the word FAMINE has been made from the letters of the two words FAME and MAIN.

(.....) .....

The Secret Room

The story of Anne Frank

Anne wanted to see the outside world. She crept up to the window. They had to be very careful so the curtains were always tightly drawn. Through a little tear in a curtain, Anne managed to peek down at the street below.
Her mother would see her doing this and chastised her. "Someone might see you, and then where would we all be?"

Anne knew it was vital for them to stay undetected so she moved away from the window.

For many months, since the German occupation of Holland, Anne Frank, aged thirteen, her elder sister Margot, their mother, Edith, and father, Otto, had lived in a set of hidden rooms behind an office wall on the top floor of a building in Amsterdam. Four others shared this 'prison cell' with them. They were all Jewish and were hiding from the Germans.

The German leader, Adolf Hitler, hated the Jews and had a plan to send them all to concentration camps where they could be murdered or allowed to die of starvation and disease. As soon as Germany invaded Holland soldiers started rounding up the Jews for deportation. The Frank family had already fled from Germany and now they had to hide again.

Anne's father had prepared this hiding place and had found friends who would bring them food and news. The entrance was well hidden behind a bookcase. There were eight of them in a few small rooms and their larder was often empty. They had to be silent all day for fear of people in the building hearing them.

We know of their life because Anne wrote a diary in a notebook which she called Kitty. They spent two years in hiding, which was especially hard for the two outgoing and lively girls. In June 1944 they heard that the British and American troops had landed in France and were pushing back the German Army. They were so relieved and even dared to think about freedom!

But on the morning of August 4th 1944 came the sound of army boots climbing the stairs below and men shouting in German. They had been betrayed. They were arrested and sent on the last train to the concentration camps.

Edith Frank died of starvation. Anne and Margot both caught typhus and died, Margot first and then Anne a few days later.

The only survivor was Otto Frank. After the war was over, he returned to Amsterdam, and one of his friends gave him his daughter's diary. It had been found amongst the debris in the secret room after the family had been arrested.

The Diary of Anne Frank is a moving document telling the story of a very brave fifteen year-old who suffered terrible hardship and died tragically when so close to freedom. You can read this diary yourself.

Now complete a Crossword on this story on the next page.

CROSSWORD

Clues Across:

3. The larder was often _____
5. Anne died of this disease.
7. Hitler's first name.
10. They were taken to the camps by _____
11. How many were hiding in the rooms?
14. When they were arrested. In the _____
16. Anne's sister.
18. The famous diarist's first name.

Clues Down:

1. The city in which they were hiding.
2. Their rooms were like a _____
4. What floor of the building were they hiding on?
6. The country the Franks had fled to for safety.
8. The only survivor of the Frank family.
9. The Franks were of what religion?
12. Hitler was the leader of _____.
13. How many years did the Franks spend in hiding?
15. The curtains were never allowed to be _____.
17. Anne peeked through a little _____.

								1
					2		3			4
								5			6
		7		8
9								10
11		12
						13
								14	15
		16					17
							18

Final question: What does chastised mean? (answer, then check your dictionary)

Answers:
(hide please!)

								1A
					2C		3E	M	P	4T	Y
					E			S		O
					L			5T	Y	P	6H	U	S
		7A	D	8O	L	F		E			O
9J				T				10R	A	I	L
11E	I	12G	H	T				D			L
W		E		O		13T		A			A
I		R				W		14M	15O	R	N	I	N	G
S		16M	A	R	G	O	17T		P		D
H		A					E		E
		N					18A	N	N	E
		Y					R		E
									D

Homophones

1/ fair
2/ plum
3/ mist
4/ roll
5/ tolled
6/ lain
7/ none
8/ pause
9/ bye, buy
10/ rode, road

Opposites Revision

here villain reveal ignorant

He pleaded innocent to the charge.
The box of books was very light.
The chocolate egg was solid.
The boy felt very humble.
The inside of the cave was minute.

future
junior minimum

Revision Anagrams

1. Chronicle
2. Chord
3. Chaotic
4. Ache
5. Auditioned
6. Tolled
7. Evaporated
8. Mosquitoes
9. Sopranos
10. Advertisement
11. Fashion
12. Appeared
13. Serial
14. Cheque
15. Tomatoes

Crossword Revision Puzzle

Down

1. Chaos
2. Mechanic
3. Anchor
4. Suspiciously
5. Architect
9. Deliberately
12. Chemistry
15. Orchestra
17. Chronic

Across

6. Technology
7. Stomach
8. Tolled
10. Scheme
11. Technical
12. Chorister
13. Queue
14. Monarchy
16. Orchid
17. Concert
18. Chasm

© Learning Street

Spelling Letter Patterns

Exercise 1

It was approaching CHRISTMAS, and the school CHOIR was in the hall for the final rehearsal. The CHORUS was lined up behind the ORCHESTRA, which had just finished tuning up. All was calm and quiet and everybody was waiting for the opening CHORD. Someone was missing. Where was the conductor? It would be CHAOTIC without him because he was the CHOIR'S ANCHOR. Hurrying footsteps ECHOED down the long corridor, and into the hall stumbled the conductor, red-faced. He apologised to everyone, blaming a 'slight TECHNICAL hitch'. Actually he had woken up with a painful STOMACH ACHE and there had been a long queue at the CHEMIST'S shop on the way to SCHOOL. Feeling better now, he stood in front of the ORCHESTRA and took up his baton. CHAOS had been averted by a little dose of medicine.

Exercise 2

1. Chaos
2. Chronic

Exercise 3

1. Chord
2. Orchid
3. Echo
4. Anchor
5. Choir

Exercise 4

1. Ache
2. Orchestra
3. Mechanic
4. Technology
5. Character

Paired Reading

1

a) Subtle
b) Humility
c) Ceaseless
d) Contrived
e) Eloquence

2
a) Unconquerable
b) Afflictions
c) Impulsive
d) Acquired
e) Stipulated

3
Determination
Privilege
Anticipation
Affectionate
Sympathised

4
a) The King's ingenuity meant that he was still undefeated.
b) The battle was ceaseless as neither army would stop fighting.
c) The woman's voice was very easy to misunderstand.
d) The young boy was petrified of snakes.
e) The man had a reputation of being scary.

Find the Mistakes - M

elderly neighbour collector gnomes
Our elderley neighbor is a collecter of garden nomes which he puts in his front garden. One is fishing in his pond and an toadstool gnome another is sitting on a enormous taodstool. One knome in Wellington wheelbarrow

green welington boots pushes a wheelbarow, but most of them there just stand there. One night last week their was a wild gale disaster blowing. In the morning his garden was a disarster, like the Hastings were place
Battle of hastings. There was bodies all over the plaice.
knocked
One of them had his head nocked off and another had lost a knee blown leg at the gnee. Two gnomes got blowen against each other so were wrestling wreck they looked like they was wresteling. His garden was a reck so I helped the old man tidy it up.

VR Test 5 – answers

1. N
2. MODERN
3. DREAMS
4. H
5. us
6. WU XV
7. DEF
8. door
9. generous selfish
10. RWHVDA
11. ladder
12. bold
13. VERSES
14. bravery
15. test
16. TIMOROUS
17. cheap
18. SPOILT
19. SIDE or DIES
20. FIT
21. view
22. worm bird
23. flour
24. grease
25. AM