Spelling Patterns

i-e spelling pattern

1. Learn the words first. Make sure you know what each word means.
2. Test yourself by writing down each word correctly in the first column. Go over any mistakes.
3. Get someone to test you and write your answers in the second column. Go over any mistakes.

Look/Learn/Cover	Write/Check 1	Write/Check 2 abide aside decide agile alive arise recognise survive
pride prize definitely indefinitely excite excitement umpire quite tired advice arrive invite mobile ignite
inside reside thrive retire fragile provide nineteen ninety exercise
televise

Spelling Pattern Exercises

i-e spelling pattern

1. You should know these words. If you make any mistakes please go over them to ensure your learning is secure.
2. These exercises are designed to test the spellings you have learnt, check your understanding and further enhance your vocabulary.

Exercise 1 – CLOZE test.
Fill in the missing letters to make the correct words.

The Big Match

I _ s i _ e the stadium the home crowd was a l _ v _ with e x c _ t _ m e _ t. The game was being t e _ e v _ s _ d and a lot of p r _ d _ was at stake. The home team's top batsman had already scored n _ n _ t _ and was l _ k _ l y to score a century. But it was q u _ t _ late in the day, the light was dimming and he was t _ r _ d. They needed n _ n _ t _ _ n more runs to win, but he was the last batsman in. Then the bowler appealed to the u _ p _ r _ . Would the batsman s u _ v _ v _ ? "D e _ i n _ t _ l y not out!" yelled the crowd. Would the u m _ i _ _ take that a d v _ c _ ? Everyone looked at him. He alone had to d _ c _ d _ . The fate of the match was in his hands. He paused, then, slowly, he lifted his finger. The crowd groaned and r e _ _ g n _ s _ d that it was all over.

Exercise 2 – The words on the left are opposites of the words on the right. Complete the words on the right.

1. calm	_ x _ _ t _	2. extinguish	_ _ n _ t _
3. wither	_ h r _ v _	4. questionably	_ _ f i n _ t _ l y

Exercise 3 – The words on the left mean the same or nearly the same as the words on the right. Complete the words on the right.

1. tolerate	_ _ i d _	2. originate	_ _ i s _
3. delicate	_ r _ g _ l _	4. inhabit	_ _ s i d _

Exercise 4 – CLOZE sentences. Fill in the missing letters to complete each sentence.

1. _ s _ d _ from Jean I have no relatives.
2. The mouse was too _ g _ l _ for the owl to catch.
3. I try to _ r _ v _ d _ for my family's needs.
4. I wanted to _ _ l _ v _ s _ the match so others could see it.
5. My cousin broke his leg and currently isn't very _ _ b _ l e.

Opposites 2 - Revision

You have learnt these harder words now do the following exercises.

What is the opposite of curse? _____

What is the opposite of bow (of a ship)? _____

What is the opposite of captivity? _____

What is the opposite of bright (shiny)? _____

What is the opposite of smooth? _____

What is the opposite of bitter? _____

Re-write theses sentences using the opposite of the word in bold.

The road was very narrow.

The puppy was bold.

The man was a captive.

My father is chubby.

The clothes are expensive.

SCORE:

If you didn't get them all correct please revise Opposites 2.

Homophones

Some words are pronounced like other words but are different in spelling and meaning, e.g. write and right.

Die	To stop living
Dye	To colour or stain something, e.g. hair
Four	The number after 3
Fore	At or near the front e.g. forehead
Pray	To beg or implore, e.g. to say prayers to God
Prey	Animal hunted or captured for food
Rain	Water falling from the clouds
Reign	The act of ruling; to dominate
Rein	A pair of straps with which to control a horse
Seam	The join of two pieces of cloth sewn together; a layer of coal
Seem	To appear to be
Right	The opposite of left; correct
Write	To form words on a surface with a pen or pencil
Stair	One step in a flight of stairs
Stare	To look with wide eyes
Steal	To take another's property without them knowing
Steel	A very hard metal alloy made from iron and carbon
Wait	To stay or pause in one place
Weight	How heavy a thing is
Waist	Part of the body between the ribs and the hips
Waste	To make poor use of. Rubbish

Choose the correct words from the pair to complete these sentences:

1. A quadruped has _____ legs; two hind legs and two _____ legs. four fore
2. Cutlery is usually made of stainless _____. steel steal
3. Queen Elizabeth is our monarch. Long may she _____! rein reign
4. Chloe decided to _____ her hair green. die dye
5. It was too heavy a _____ to lift. weight wait
6. Most people _____ with their _____ hand. right write
7. Millions of people spread all over the world _____for peace. prey pray
8. In the _____ the rider used the _____ to guide the horse along the muddy track. rein rain
9. She placed the rubbish in the _____ bin. waist waste
10. Her shirt was coming apart at the _____ . seam seem

You should learn these off by heart.

E. Ellie Morgan's school work for marking

It was sunney on the high ground but when I folowed the path into the valey bottem the temprature droped. It became foggy and the sun disappeered. There was due hanging from the branches, like jewellry. I was unsure of the way but then I saw a dissused barn among the trees, partly hiddern in the mist. There appeered to be a light in the attick window. I approached, beginning to fear for my safetey.

Suddenly the door flew open and a dark figure, more like a furry mammall than a human, rushed past me and disapeared up the hill. "Come back! I screemed, but he was gone, and all was quiet. I turned to run home, but sliped over on the wet grass. The barn door creeked.

How many mistakes in spelling or grammar did you spot?

15 Plurals

Plurals and singulars which are the same.

These words are the same whether they are singular or plural:

cannon	fish	salmon
cod	goldfish	sheep
deer	grouse	swine
dozen	mackerel	trout

Complete these sentences with the correct plural spelling of the bold singular noun. You will not need to change the spelling.

1. Mr Jones, the farmer, has shorn one sheep and has fifteen _____ yet to do.
2. I won ten _____ at the fair but one goldfish, sadly, has since died.
3. The British had forty _____ at the battle and only one cannon was lost to the enemy.
4. Tom was so hungry that he ordered two _____ and chips for himself and one cod and chips for his little brother.
5. Granny usually ordered half a dozen eggs but when the family finally arrived she needed to buy two _____.

SCORE

16 Plurals

Compound words

The plurals of some compound words are formed by making the first word plural:

FOLD

1.	son-in-law		sons-in-law
2.	passer-by		passers-by
3.	man-of-war		men-of-war
4.	coat-of-mail		coats-of-mail
5.	hanger-on		hangers-on
6.	maid-of-honour		maids-of-honour
7.	looker-on		lookers-on

The plurals of other compound words are formed by making the last word plural:

8.	police-constable		police-constables
9.	mouse-trap		mouse-traps
10.	washer-woman		washer-women
11.	bye-law		bye-laws
12.	step-child		step-children
13.	page-boy		page-boys
14.	by-way		by-ways

SCORE 1st attempt 2nd attempt

Paired Reading 2: The Railway Children by E. Nesbit

CHAPTER VI -SAVIOURS OF THE TRAIN-

The Railway Children is a classic story following the lives of three children who move to a house called the 'Three Chimneys' near a railway station, after their father is wrongly imprisoned for being a spy. In this extract, the children are forced to intervene after witnessing a potentially catastrophic landslide on the railway track.

The Russian gentleman was better the next day, and the day after that better still, and on the third day he was well enough to come into the garden. A basket chair was put for him and he sat there, dressed in clothes of Father's which were too big for him. But when Mother had hemmed up the ends of the sleeves and the trousers, the clothes did well enough. His was a kind face now that it was no longer tired and frightened, and he smiled at the children whenever he saw them. They wished very much that he could speak English. Mother wrote several letters to people she thought might know whereabouts in England a Russian gentleman's wife and family might possibly be; not to the people she used to know before she came to live at Three Chimneys—she never wrote to any of them—but strange people—Members of Parliament and Editors of papers, and Secretaries of Societies.

And she did not do much of her story-writing, only corrected proofs as she sat in the sun near the Russian, and talked to him every now and then.

The children wanted very much to show how kindly they felt to this man who had been sent to prison and to Siberia just for writing a beautiful book about poor people. They could smile at him, of course; they could and they did. But if you smile too constantly, the smile is apt to get fixed like the smile of the hyaena. And then it no longer looks friendly, but simply silly. So they tried other ways, and brought him flowers till the place where he sat was surrounded by little fading bunches of clover and roses and Canterbury bells.

And then Phyllis had an idea. She beckoned mysteriously to the others and drew them into the back yard, and there, in a concealed spot, between the pump and the water-butt, she said:—

"You remember Perks promising me the very first strawberries out of his own garden?" Perks, you will recollect, was the Porter. "Well, I should think they're ripe now. Let's go down and see."

Mother had been down as she had promised to tell the Station Master the story of the Russian Prisoner. But even the charms of the railway had been unable to tear the children away from the neighbourhood of the interesting stranger. So they had not been to the station for three days.

They went now.

And, to their surprise and distress, were very coldly received by Perks.

"'Ighly honoured, I'm sure," he said when they peeped in at the door of the Porters' room. And he went on reading his newspaper.

There was an uncomfortable silence.

"Oh, dear," said Bobbie, with a sigh, "I do believe you're CROSS."

"What, me? Not me!" said Perks loftily; "it ain't nothing to me."

"What AIN'T nothing to you?" said Peter, too anxious and alarmed to change the form of words.

"Nothing ain't nothing. What 'appens either 'ere or elsewhere," said Perks; "if you likes to 'ave your secrets, 'ave 'em and welcome. That's what I say."

The secret-chamber of each heart was rapidly examined during the pause that followed. Three heads were shaken.

"We haven't got any secrets from YOU," said Bobbie at last.

"Maybe you 'ave, and maybe you 'aven't," said Perks; "it ain't nothing to me. And I wish you all a very good afternoon." He held up the paper between him and them and went on reading.

"Oh, DON'T!" said Phyllis, in despair; "this is truly dreadful! Whatever it is, do tell us."

"We didn't mean to do it whatever it was."

No answer. The paper was refolded and Perks began on another column.

"Look here," said Peter, suddenly, "it's not fair. Even people who do crimes aren't punished without being told what it's for—as once they were in Russia."

"I don't know nothing about Russia."

"Oh, yes, you do, when Mother came down on purpose to tell you and Mr. Gills all about OUR Russian."

"Can't you fancy it?" said Perks, indignantly; "don't you see 'im a-asking of me to step into 'is room and take a chair and listen to what 'er Ladyship 'as to say?"

"Do you mean to say you've not heard?"

"Not so much as a breath. I did go so far as to put a question. And he shuts me up like a rat-trap. 'Affairs of State, Perks,' says he. But I did think one o' you would 'a' nipped down to tell me—you're here sharp enough when you want to get anything out of old Perks"—Phyllis flushed purple as she thought of the strawberries—"information about locomotives or signals or the likes," said Perks.

"We didn't know you didn't know."

"We thought Mother had told you."

"Wewantedtotellyouonlywethoughtitwouldbestalenews."

The three spoke all at once.

Perks said it was all very well, and still held up the paper. Then Phyllis suddenly snatched it away, and threw her arms round his neck.

"Oh, let's kiss and be friends," she said; "we'll say we're sorry first, if you like, but we didn't really know that you didn't know."

"We are so sorry," said the others.

And Perks at last consented to accept their apologies.

Then they got him to come out and sit in the sun on the green Railway Bank, where the grass was quite hot to touch, and there, sometimes speaking one at a time, and sometimes all together, they told the Porter the story of the Russian Prisoner.

"Well, I must say," said Perks; but he did not say it—whatever it was.

"Yes, it is pretty awful, isn't it?" said Peter, "and I don't wonder you were curious about who the Russian was."

"I wasn't curious, not so much as interested," said the Porter.

"Well, I do think Mr. Gills might have told you about it. It was horrid of him."

"I don't keep no down on 'im for that, Missie," said the Porter; "cos why? I see 'is reasons. 'E wouldn't want to give away 'is own side with a tale like that 'ere. It ain't human nature. A man's got to stand up for his own side whatever they does. That's what it means by Party Politics. I should 'a' done the same myself if that long-'aired chap 'ad 'a' been a Jap."

"But the Japs didn't do cruel, wicked things like that," said Bobbie.

"P'r'aps not," said Perks, cautiously; "still you can't be sure with foreigners. My own belief is they're all tarred with the same brush."

"Then why were you on the side of the Japs?" Peter asked.

"Well, you see, you must take one side or the other. Same as with Liberals and Conservatives. The great thing is to take your side and then stick to it, whatever happens."

A signal sounded.

"There's the 3.14 up," said Perks. "You lie low till she's through, and then we'll go up along to my place, and see if there's any of them strawberries ripe what I told you about."

"If there are any ripe, and you DO give them to me," said Phyllis, "you won't mind if I give them to the poor Russian, will you?"

Perks narrowed his eyes and then raised his eyebrows.

"So it was them strawberries you come down for this afternoon, eh?" said he.

This was an awkward moment for Phyllis. To say "yes" would seem rude and greedy, and unkind to Perks. But she knew if she said "no," she would not be pleased with herself afterwards. So—

"Yes," she said, "it was."

"Well done!" said the Porter; "speak the truth and shame the—"

"But we'd have come down the very next day if we'd known you hadn't heard the story," Phyllis added hastily.

"I believe you, Missie," said Perks, and sprang across the line six feet in front of the advancing train.

The girls hated to see him do this, but Peter liked it. It was so exciting.

The Russian gentleman was so delighted with the strawberries that the three racked their brains to find some other surprise for him. But all the racking did not bring out any idea more novel than wild cherries. And this idea occurred to them next morning. They had seen the blossom on the trees in the spring, and they knew where to look for wild cherries now that cherry time was here. The trees grew all up and along the rocky face of the cliff out of which the mouth of the tunnel opened. There were all sorts of trees there, birches and beeches and baby oaks and hazels, and among them the cherry blossom had shone like snow and silver.

The mouth of the tunnel was some way from Three Chimneys, so Mother let them take their lunch with them in a basket. And the basket would do to bring the cherries back in if they found any. She also lent them her silver watch so that they should not be late for tea. Peter's Waterbury had taken it into its head not to go since the day when Peter dropped it into the water-butt. And they started. When they got to the top of the cutting, they leaned over the fence and looked down to where the railway lines lay at the bottom of what, as Phyllis said, was exactly like a mountain gorge.

"If it wasn't for the railway at the bottom, it would be as though the foot of man had never been there, wouldn't it?"

The sides of the cutting were of grey stone, very roughly hewn. Indeed, the top part of the cutting had been a little natural glen that had been cut deeper to bring it down to the level of the tunnel's mouth. Among the rocks, grass and flowers grew, and seeds dropped by birds in the crannies of the stone had taken root and grown into bushes and trees that overhung the cutting. Near the tunnel was a flight of steps leading down to the line—just wooden bars roughly fixed into the earth—a very steep and narrow way, more like a ladder than a stair.

"We'd better get down," said Peter; "I'm sure the cherries would be quite easy to get at from the side of the steps. You remember it was there we picked the cherry blossoms that we put on the rabbit's grave."

So they went along the fence towards the little swing gate that is at the top of these steps. And they were almost at the gate when Bobbie said:—

"Hush. Stop! What's that?"

"That" was a very odd noise indeed—a soft noise, but quite plainly to be heard through the sound of the wind in tree branches, and the hum and whir of the telegraph wires. It was a sort of rustling, whispering sound. As they listened it stopped, and then it began again.

And this time it did not stop, but it grew louder and more rustling and rumbling.

"Look"—cried Peter, suddenly—"the tree over there!"

The tree he pointed at was one of those that have rough grey leaves and white flowers. The berries, when they come, are bright scarlet, but if you pick them, they disappoint you by turning black before you get them home. And, as Peter pointed, the tree was moving—not just the way trees ought to move when the wind blows through them, but all in one piece, as though it were a live creature and were walking down the side of the cutting.

"It's moving!" cried Bobbie. "Oh, look! and so are the others. It's like the woods in Macbeth."

"It's magic," said Phyllis, breathlessly. "I always knew this railway was enchanted."

It really did seem a little like magic. For all the trees for about twenty yards of the opposite bank seemed to be slowly walking down towards the railway line, the tree with the grey leaves bringing up the rear like some old shepherd driving a flock of green sheep.

"What is it? Oh, what is it?" said Phyllis; "it's much too magic for me. I don't like it. Let's go home."

But Bobbie and Peter clung fast to the rail and watched breathlessly. And Phyllis made no movement towards going home by herself.

The trees moved on and on. Some stones and loose earth fell down and rattled on the railway metals far below.

"It's ALL coming down," Peter tried to say, but he found there was hardly any voice to say it with. And, indeed, just as he spoke, the great rock, on the top of which the walking trees were, leaned slowly forward. The trees, ceasing to walk, stood still and shivered. Leaning with the rock, they seemed to hesitate a moment, and then rock and trees and grass and bushes, with a rushing sound, slipped right away from the face of the cutting and fell on the line with a blundering crash that could have been heard half a mile off. A cloud of dust rose up.

"Oh," said Peter, in awestruck tones, "isn't it exactly like when coals come in?—if there wasn't any roof to the cellar and you could see down."

"Look what a great mound it's made!" said Bobbie.

"Yes," said Peter, slowly. He was still leaning on the fence. "Yes," he said again, still more slowly.

Then he stood upright.

"The 11.29 down hasn't gone by yet. We must let them know at the station, or there'll be a most frightful accident."

"Let's run," said Bobbie, and began.

But Peter cried, "Come back!" and looked at Mother's watch. He was very prompt and businesslike, and his face looked whiter than they had ever seen it.

"No time," he said; "it's two miles away, and it's past eleven."

"Couldn't we," suggested Phyllis, breathlessly, "couldn't we climb up a telegraph post and do something to the wires?"

"We don't know how," said Peter.

"They do it in war," said Phyllis; "I know I've heard of it."

"They only CUT them, silly," said Peter, "and that doesn't do any good. And we couldn't cut them even if we got up, and we couldn't get up. If we had anything red, we could get down on the line and wave it."

"But the train wouldn't see us till it got round the corner, and then it could see the mound just as well as us," said Phyllis; "better, because it's much bigger than us."

"If we only had something red," Peter repeated, "we could go round the corner and wave to the train."

"We might wave, anyway."

"They'd only think it was just US, as usual. We've waved so often before. Anyway, let's get down."

They got down the steep stairs. Bobbie was pale and shivering. Peter's face looked thinner than usual. Phyllis was red-faced and damp with anxiety.

"Oh, how hot I am!" she said; "and I thought it was going to be cold; I wish we hadn't put on our—" she stopped short, and then ended in quite a different tone—"our flannel petticoats."

Bobbie turned at the bottom of the stairs.

"Oh, yes," she cried; "THEY'RE red! Let's take them off."

They did, and with the petticoats rolled up under their arms, ran along the railway, skirting the newly fallen mound of stones and rock and earth, and bent, crushed, twisted trees. They ran at their best pace. Peter led, but the girls were not far behind. They reached the corner that hid the mound from the straight line of railway that ran half a mile without curve or corner.

"Now," said Peter, taking hold of the largest flannel petticoat.

"You're not"—Phyllis faltered—"you're not going to TEAR them?"

"Shut up," said Peter, with brief sternness.

"Oh, yes," said Bobbie, "tear them into little bits if you like. Don't you see, Phil, if we can't stop the train, there'll be a real live accident, with people KILLED. Oh, horrible! Here, Peter, you'll never tear it through the band!"

She took the red flannel petticoat from him and tore it off an inch from the band. Then she tore the other in the same way.

"There!" said Peter, tearing in his turn. He divided each petticoat into three pieces. "Now, we've got six flags." He looked at the watch again. "And we've got seven minutes. We must have flagstaffs."

The knives given to boys are, for some odd reason, seldom of the kind of steel that keeps sharp. The young saplings had to be broken off. Two came up by the roots. The leaves were stripped from them.

"We must cut holes in the flags, and run the sticks through the holes," said Peter. And the holes were cut. The knife was sharp enough to cut flannel with. Two of the flags were set up in heaps of loose stones between the sleepers of the down line. Then Phyllis and Roberta took each a flag, and stood ready to wave it as soon as the train came in sight.

"I shall have the other two myself," said Peter, "because it was my idea to wave something red."

"They're our petticoats, though," Phyllis was beginning, but Bobbie interrupted—

"Oh, what does it matter who waves what, if we can only save the train?"

Perhaps Peter had not rightly calculated the number of minutes it would take the 11.29 to get from the station to the place where they were, or perhaps the train was late. Anyway, it seemed a very long time that they waited.

Phyllis grew impatient. "I expect the watch is wrong, and the train's gone by," said she.

Peter relaxed the heroic attitude he had chosen to show off his two flags. And Bobbie began to feel sick with suspense.

It seemed to her that they had been standing there for hours and hours, holding those silly little red flannel flags that no one would ever notice. The train wouldn't care. It would go rushing by them and tear round the corner and go crashing into that awful mound. And everyone would be killed. Her hands grew very cold and trembled so that she could hardly hold the flag. And then came the distant rumble and hum of the metals, and a puff of white steam showed far away along the stretch of line.

"Stand firm," said Peter, "and wave like mad! When it gets to that big furze bush step back, but go on waving! Don't stand ON the line, Bobbie!"

The train came rattling along very, very fast.

"They don't see us! They won't see us! It's all no good!" cried Bobbie.

The two little flags on the line swayed as the nearing train shook and loosened the heaps of loose stones that held them up. One of them slowly leaned over and fell on the line. Bobbie jumped forward and caught it up, and waved it; her hands did not tremble now.

It seemed that the train came on as fast as ever. It was very near now.

"Keep off the line, you silly cuckoo!" said Peter, fiercely.

"It's no good," Bobbie said again.

"Stand back!" cried Peter, suddenly, and he dragged Phyllis back by the arm.

But Bobbie cried, "Not yet, not yet!" and waved her two flags right over the line. The front of the engine looked black and enormous. Its voice was loud and harsh.

"Oh, stop, stop, stop!" cried Bobbie. No one heard her. At least Peter and Phyllis didn't, for the oncoming rush of the train covered the sound of her voice with a mountain of sound. But afterwards she used to wonder whether the engine itself had not heard her. It seemed almost as though it had—for it slackened swiftly, slackened and stopped, not twenty yards from the place where Bobbie's two flags waved over the line. She saw the great black engine stop dead, but somehow she could not stop waving the flags. And when the driver and the fireman had got off the engine and Peter and Phyllis had gone to meet them and pour out their excited tale of the awful mound just round the corner, Bobbie still waved the flags but more and more feebly and jerkily.

When the others turned towards her she was lying across the line with her hands flung forward and still gripping the sticks of the little red flannel flags.

The engine-driver picked her up, carried her to the train, and laid her on the cushions of a first-class carriage.

"Gone right off in a faint," he said, "poor little woman. And no wonder. I'll just 'ave a look at this 'ere mound of yours, and then we'll run you back to the station and get her seen to."

It was horrible to see Bobbie lying so white and quiet, with her lips blue, and parted.

"I believe that's what people look like when they're dead," whispered Phyllis.

"DON'T!" said Peter, sharply.

They sat by Bobbie on the blue cushions, and the train ran back. Before it reached their station Bobbie had sighed and opened her eyes, and rolled herself over and begun to cry. This cheered the others wonderfully. They had seen her cry before, but they had never seen her faint, nor anyone else, for the matter of that. They had not known what to do when she was fainting, but now she was only crying they could thump her on the back and tell her not to, just as they always did. And presently, when she stopped crying, they were able to laugh at her for being such a coward as to faint.

When the station was reached, the three were the heroes of an agitated meeting on the platform.

The praises they got for their "prompt action," their "common sense," their "ingenuity," were enough to have turned anybody's head. Phyllis enjoyed herself thoroughly. She had never been a real heroine before, and the feeling was delicious. Peter's ears got very red. Yet he, too, enjoyed himself. Only Bobbie wished they all wouldn't. She wanted to get away.

"You'll hear from the Company about this, I expect," said the Station Master.

Bobbie wished she might never hear of it again. She pulled at Peter's jacket.

"Oh, come away, come away! I want to go home," she said.

So they went. And as they went Station Master and Porter and guards and driver and fireman and passengers sent up a cheer.

"Oh, listen," cried Phyllis; "that's for US!"

"Yes," said Peter. "I say, I am glad I thought about something red, and waving it."

"How lucky we DID put on our red flannel petticoats!" said Phyllis.

Bobbie said nothing. She was thinking of the horrible mound, and the trustful train rushing towards it.

"And it was US that saved them," said Peter.

"How dreadful if they had all been killed!" said Phyllis; "wouldn't it, Bobbie?"

"We never got any cherries, after all," said Bobbie.

The others thought her rather heartless.

-Please answer the questions on the following page-

Questions

The following words are all underlined in the text above:

Beckoned	Agitated	Heroic	Despair	Suspense
Wonderfully	Distress	Ingenuity		Awestruck
Delighted	Delicious	Prompt	Anxious
Frightful				Calculated
	Breathlessly	Blundering	Enormous
Impatient		Anxiety

1) In the boxes labelled A-E, write down a word from the box above which correctly matches the following definitions

A		admirably brave or determined
B		having a tendency to be quickly irritated or provoked
C		a feeling of worry, nervousness or unease
D		complete loss or absence of hope
E		filled with or revealing awe

2) For the following five sentences, pick a word from the box above to complete the sentence so that it makes sense

The children did not like the _____ of waiting for their exam results.

Molly became very _____ as she heard the bad news.

The boy was very _____ to get back on the horse after falling off before.

The puppy showed signs of _____ after being left alone for the first time.

After completing the 100m, Nicola spoke _____ to her coach.

3) Using the clues given, unscramble the following anagrams to find a word from the box above

A) rufflight [ ]

Clue: This word means very unpleasant, serious or shocking

B) burgledinn [ ]

Clue: This word means to act or speak clumsily or make a stupid mistake

C) eyingunit [ ]

Clue: Synonyms for this word include: brilliance, genius and intelligence

D) hedgedlit [ ]

Clue: Antonyms of this word include: Bored, depressed and sad

E) bendcoke [ ]

Clue: This word means you are gesturing or signalling something

4) The following sentences all have a gap, choose a word from the box to fill the gap in the sentence. Write the sentence out correctly.

a) Bradley had correctly how long it would take him to get there.

b) Rose thanked the police for taking such action.

c) Mary's cakes had a reputation for being .

d) Zach felt happy now that he was at the zoo.

e) Sophie could not believe how the giraffe was.

Revision Anagrams – Jumbled Letters

- This exercise uses words you have recently learnt.
- Use the clues to help you sort the letters out to find the answer.
- If you are not sure of a word (spelling or meaning) add it to your own personal vocabulary list.

Question	Clue	Answer
1. raise	When something emerges.
2. vsiveur	Continue to live and exist.
3. enrig	Someone's rule over something.
4. desire	To live somewhere.
5. wigthe	How heavy someone or something is.
6. waits	Sounds like waste. Above the hips and below the ribs.
7. riseeexc	A physical activity that helps you to be fit.
8. caveid	To give guidance.
9. amse	Sounds like seem. The line where two pieces of fabric are sewn together.
10. aides	To the side.
11. zepri	Something that is given as a reward, usually for an achievement.
12. tedri	Feeling as though you need more sleep.
13. meboil	The extent to which someone or something can move.
14. viperdo	Giving something to someone. Making something available.
15. yepr	An animal that is hunted.

Crossword Revision Puzzle

You have recently learnt all these words. Use the clues to solve the puzzle. Please revise any you are not sure of.

															1 A		I	D	2
															V				X
				3				4			5		6
				A		7		A											U
8				M		I		I			C
						9			E			S			B
10		P		U		E							F		L				S
I										11		T
D			12					E			M
E		13	G		I	T
									14
			L			R		15	R		T	T
													L
									G			16		E
												Z
									E			E
												N

Clues down

1. Able to be used.
2. Prevent from being included or accepted.
3. Being known about by a lot of people
4. An act that fails.
5. The feeling of lively and cheerful joy.
6. Never ending.
7. Creative writing.
8. To make a choice.
12. Moving quickly or lightly.
14. Easily broken or destroyed.
16. A quantity consisting of 12 items or units.

Clues across

1. To put up with something or obey the rules
4. The front of something.
9. Broadcast via television.
10. To catch and hold onto someone or something.
11. To stop doing something like a job.
13. To start burning something.
15. The past tense of 'to write'.
16. A substance used to change the colour of something.

CR/8

SHUFFLED SENTENCES TEST

These sentences intentionally use very difficult vocabulary. If you do not know a word, use your personal words list.

Section 1

Order your words in a correct sentence. Identify the one word in each sentence which is not needed. Remember to work actively, try and find the subject of each sentence and come back to any you don't get.

1. barb a fished ended hook with the double
2. face a of Jane's look anguish raucous crossed
3. earnings job he augment raised took a to his second
4. triumph our revelled in we celebrate
5. pious joy was replete she with

Section 2

Write the correct word in the sentence.

1. The yachtmaster chose a generous _____ (berth, birth)
2. The smoke alarm had to have an accurate _____ (censor, sensor)

Section 3

Choose and write out the correct spelling from each pair given.

1. harrass, harass _____ dissappear, disappear _____

SS2

Alternative Word Test

Circle the word that fits best with each sentence.

1. The boys were chasing along / before / to / after the ball as it bounced down the road.

2. The number of participants was roundly / approximate / estimated / roughly at three hundred.

3. Mums always try to take good care of they're / them / their / there children.

4. The Saracens rugby team came out in the second half to set at / in / about / on overhauling their opponents.

5. Swinging from a trapeze is not what most people would see / contemplate / think / consider a normal pastime.

Opposites Test

Some of these words will be new to you. Try to find as many as you can. This test includes two styles of question.

Section 1

Fill in the blanks in the word on the right so that it has an opposite meaning to the word on the left.

smart	s l _ _ e n _ y
mean	g e n _ _ _ u _
childish	m _ _ _ r e
diminish	i n _ _ _ _ s _
lofty	l _ _ _ y

Section 2

Choose the word on the right which is most opposite in meaning to the word on the left.

perimeter	circuit	circumference	interior	border
queasy	ill	nauseous	well	happy
hesitant	intrusive	stubborn	opinionated	decisive participated	abstained	disregarded	disengage	profferred
aggravation	brazen	hurtful	dignify	solace

OT1

ANSWERS - COMPLETE VOCABULARY – PART 8

Opposite 2 Revision bless stern freedom dull coarse sweet

The road was very broad.
The puppy was timid.
The man was free.
My father is slim.
The clothes are cheap.

Homophones

1/ four, fore
2/ steel
3/ reign
4/ dye
5/ weight
6/ write, right
7/ pray
8/ rain, rein
9/ waste
10/ seam

Revision Anagram

1. Arise
2. Survive
3. Reign
4. Reside
5. Weight
6. Waist
7. Exercise
8. Advice
9. Seam
10. Aside
6. Prize
7. Tired
8. Mobile
9. Provide
10. Prey

Crossword Revision Puzzle

Down

1. Available
2. Excludes
3. Famous
4. Failure
5. Excitement
6. Indefinitely
7. Literature
8. Decide
12. Agile
14. Fragile
16. Dozen

Across

1. Abide
4. Fore
9. Televise
10. Capture
11. Retire
13. Ignite
15. Written
16. Dye

ANSWERS - COMPLETE VOCABULARY – PART 8

Spelling Letter Patterns

Exercise 1

INSIDE the stadium the home crowd was ALIVE with EXCITEMENT. The game was being TELEVISED and a lot of PRIDE was at stake. The home team's top batsman had already scored NINETY and was LIKELY to score a century. But it was QUITE late in the day, the light was dimming and he was TIRED. They needed NINETEEN more runs to win, but he was the last batsman in. Then the bowler appealed to the UMPIRE . Would the batsman SURVIVE ? "DEFINITELY not out!" yelled the crowd. Would the UMPIRE take that ADVICE ? Everyone looked at him. He alone had to DECIDE . The fate of the match was in his hands. He paused, then, slowly, he lifted his finger. The crowd groaned and RECOGNISED that it was all over.

Exercise 2

1. Excite
2. Ignite
3. Thrive
4. Definitely

Exercise 3

1. Abide
2. Arise
3. Fragile
4. Reside

Exercise 4

1. Aside
2. Agile
3. Provide
4. Televise
5. Mobile

Plurals

1/ sheep
2/ goldfish
3/ cannon
4/ cod
5/ dozen

Find the Mistakes - E

sunny followed
It was sunney on the high ground but when I folowed the valley bottom temperature dropped path into the valey bottem the temprature droped. It became disappeared dew foggy and the sun disappeered. There was due hanging from jewellery
the branches, like jewellry. I was unsure of the way but then disused hidden
I saw a dissused barn among the trees, partly hiddern in the appeared attic mist. There appeered to be a light in the attick window. I safety approached, beginning to fear for my safetey.

Suddenly the door flew open and a dark figure, more like a furry mammal disappeared
mammall than a human, rushed past me and disapeared up the hill.
back!" screamed
"Come back! I screemed, but he was gone, and all was quiet. I slipped turned to run home, but sliped over on the wet grass. The barn creaked door creeked.

Paired Reading

1)
a) heroic
b) impatient
c) anxiety
d) despair
e) awestruck

2)
a) suspense
b) agitated
c) anxious
d) distress
e) breathlessly

3)
a) frightful
b) blundering
c) ingenuity

d) delighted
e) beckoned

4)
a) Bradley had correctly calculated how long it would take him to get there
b) Rose thanked the police for taking such prompt action
c) Mary's cakes had a reputation for being delicious
d) Zach felt wonderfully happy now that he was at the zoo
e) Sophie could not believe how enormous the giraffe was

Shuffled Sentences

Section 1:

1. The hook ended with a double barb - fished
2. A look of anguish crossed Jane's face - raucous
3. He took a second job to augment his earnings - raised
4. We revelled in our triumph - celebrate
5. She was replete with joy - pious

Section 2:

1. berth
2. sensor

Section 3:

1. harass, disappear

Alternative Word CLOZE

1. after
2. estimated
3. their
4. about
5. consider

Opposites Test

Section 1:

slovenly generous mature increase lowly

Section 2:

interior
well decisive abstained
solace