Paired Reading 5: Anne of Green Gables by Lucy Maud Montgomery

CHAPTER IV
-MORNING AT GREEN GABLES-

Anne of Green Gables tells the story of the eleven year old orphan Anne Shirley, as she mistakenly gets sent to live with Marilla and Matthew Cuthbert in Prince Edward Island. This extract follows the imaginative Anne's first morning at Green Gables and shows her excitement and adoration for the beautiful rural countryside.

It was broad daylight when Anne awoke and sat up in bed, staring confusedly at the window through which a flood of cheery sunshine was pouring and outside of which something white and feathery waved across glimpses of blue sky.

For a moment she could not remember where she was. First came a delightful thrill, as something very pleasant; then a horrible remembrance. This was Green Gables and they didn't want her because she wasn't a boy!

But it was morning and, yes, it was a cherry-tree in full bloom outside of her window. With a bound she was out of bed and across the floor. She pushed up the sash—it went up stiffly and creakily, as if it hadn't been opened for a long time, which was the case; and it stuck so tight that nothing was needed to hold it up.

Anne dropped on her knees and gazed out into the June morning, her eyes glistening with delight. Oh, wasn't it beautiful? Wasn't it a lovely place? Suppose she wasn't really going to stay here! She would imagine she was. There was scope for imagination here.

A huge cherry-tree grew outside, so close that its boughs tapped against the house, and it was so thick-set with blossoms that hardly a leaf was to be seen. On both sides of the house was a big orchard, one of apple-trees and one of cherry- trees, also showered over with blossoms; and their grass was all sprinkled with dandelions. In the garden below were lilac-trees purple with flowers, and their dizzily sweet fragrance drifted up to the window on the morning wind.

Below the garden a green field lush with clover sloped down to the hollow where the brook ran and where scores of white birches grew, up-springing airily out of an undergrowth suggestive of delightful possibilities in ferns and mosses and woodsy things generally. Beyond it was a hill, green and feathery with spruce and fir; there was a gap in it where the grey gable end of the little house she had seen from the other side of the Lake of Shining Waters was visible.

Off to the left were the big barns and beyond them, away down over green, low-sloping fields, was a sparkling blue glimpse of sea.

Anne's beauty-loving eyes lingered on it all, taking everything greedily in. She had looked on so many unlovely places in her life, poor child; but this was as lovely as anything she had ever dreamed.

She knelt there, lost to everything but the loveliness around her, until she was startled by a hand on her shoulder. Marilla had come in unheard by the small dreamer.

"It's time you were dressed," she said curtly.

Marilla really did not know how to talk to the child, and her uncomfortable ignorance made her crisp and curt when she did not mean to be.

Anne stood up and drew a long breath.

"Oh, isn't it wonderful?" she said, waving her hand comprehensively at the good world outside.

"It's a big tree," said Marilla, "and it blooms great, but the fruit don't amount to much never—small and wormy."

"Oh, I don't mean just the tree; of course it's lovely—yes, it's RADIANTLY lovely—it blooms as if it meant it—but I meant everything, the garden and the orchard and the brook and the woods, the whole big dear world. Don't you feel as if you just loved the world on a morning like this? And I can hear the brook laughing all the way up here. Have you ever noticed what cheerful things brooks are? They're always laughing. Even in winter-time I've heard them under the ice. I'm so glad there's a brook near Green Gables. Perhaps you think it doesn't make any difference to me when you're not going to keep me, but it does. I shall always like to remember that there is a brook at Green Gables even if I never see it again. If there wasn't a brook I'd be HAUNTED by the uncomfortable feeling that there ought to be one. I'm not in the depths of despair this morning. I never can be in the morning. Isn't it a splendid thing that there are mornings? But I feel very sad. I've just been imagining that it was really me you wanted after all and that I was to stay here for ever and ever. It was a great comfort while it lasted. But the worst of imagining things is that the time comes when you have to stop and that hurts."

"You'd better get dressed and come down-stairs and never mind your imaginings," said Marilla as soon as she could get a word in edgewise. "Breakfast is waiting. Wash your face and comb your hair. Leave the window up and turn your bedclothes back over the foot of the bed. Be as smart as you can."

Anne could evidently be smart to some purpose for she was down-stairs in ten minutes' time, with her clothes neatly on, her hair brushed and braided, her face washed, and a comfortable consciousness pervading her soul that she had fulfilled all Marilla's requirements. As a matter of fact, however, she had forgotten to turn back the bedclothes.

"I'm pretty hungry this morning," she announced as she slipped into the chair Marilla placed for her. "The world doesn't seem such a howling wilderness as it did last night. I'm so glad it's a sunshiny morning. But I like rainy mornings real well, too. All sorts of mornings are interesting, don't you think? You don't know what's going to happen through the day, and there's so much scope for imagination. But I'm glad it's not rainy today because it's easier to be cheerful and bear up under affliction on a sunshiny day. I feel that I have a good deal to bear up under. It's all very well to read about sorrows and imagine yourself living through them heroically, but it's not so nice when you really come to have them, is it?"

"For pity's sake hold your tongue," said Marilla. "You talk entirely too much for a little girl."

Thereupon Anne held her tongue so obediently and thoroughly that her continued silence made Marilla rather nervous, as if in the presence of something not exactly natural. Matthew also held his tongue,—but this was natural,—so that the meal was a very silent one.

As it progressed Anne became more and more abstracted, eating mechanically, with her big eyes fixed unswervingly and unseeingly on the sky outside the window. This made Marilla more nervous than ever; she had an uncomfortable feeling that while this odd child's body might be there at the table her spirit was far away in some remote airy cloudland, borne aloft on the wings of imagination. Who would want such a child about the place?

Yet Matthew wished to keep her, of all unaccountable things! Marilla felt that he wanted it just as much this morning as he had the night before, and that he would go on wanting it. That was Matthew's way—take a whim into his head and cling to it with the most amazing silent persistency—a persistency ten times more potent and effectual in its very silence than if he had talked it out.

When the meal was ended Anne came out of her reverie and offered to wash the dishes.

"Can you wash dishes right?" asked Marilla distrustfully.

"Pretty well. I'm better at looking after children, though. I've had so much experience at that. It's such a pity you haven't any here for me to look after."

"I don't feel as if I wanted any more children to look after than I've got at present. YOU'RE problem enough in all conscience. What's to be done with you I don't know. Matthew is a most ridiculous man."

"I think he's lovely," said Anne reproachfully. "He is so very sympathetic. He didn't mind how much I talked—he seemed to like it. I felt that he was a kindred spirit as soon as ever I saw him."

"You're both queer enough, if that's what you mean by kindred spirits," said Marilla with a sniff. "Yes, you may wash the dishes. Take plenty of hot water, and be sure you dry them well. I've got enough to attend to this morning for I'll have to drive over to White Sands in the afternoon and see Mrs. Spencer. You'll come with me and we'll settle what's to be done with you. After you've finished the dishes go up-stairs and make your bed."

Anne washed the dishes deftly enough, as Marilla who kept a sharp eye on the process, discerned. Later on she made her bed less successfully, for she had never learned the art of wrestling with a feather tick. But is was done somehow and smoothed down; and then Marilla, to get rid of her, told her she might go out-of-doors and amuse herself until dinner time.

Anne flew to the door, face alight, eyes glowing. On the very threshold she stopped short, wheeled about, came back and sat down by the table, light and glow as effectually blotted out as if someone had clapped an extinguisher on her.

"What's the matter now?" demanded Marilla.

"I don't dare go out," said Anne, in the tone of a martyr relinquishing all earthly joys. "If I can't stay here there is no use in my loving Green Gables. And if I go out there and get acquainted with all those trees and flowers and the orchard and the brook I'll not be able to help loving it. It's hard enough now, so I won't make it any harder. I want to go out so much—everything seems to be calling to me, 'Anne, Anne, come out to us. Anne, Anne, we want a playmate'—but it's better not. There is no use in loving things if you have to be torn from them, is there? And it's so hard to keep from loving things, isn't it? That was why I was so glad when I thought I was going to live here. I thought I'd have so many things to love and nothing to hinder me. But that brief dream is over. I am resigned to my fate now, so I don't think I'll go out for fear I'll get unresigned again. What is the name of that geranium on the window-sill, please?"

"That's the apple-scented geranium."

"Oh, I don't mean that sort of a name. I mean just a name you gave it yourself. Didn't you give it a name? May I give it one then? May I call it—let me see— Bonny would do—may I call it Bonny while I'm here? Oh, do let me!"

"Goodness, I don't care. But where on earth is the sense of naming a geranium?"

"Oh, I like things to have handles even if they are only geraniums. It makes them seem more like people. How do you know but that it hurts a geranium's feelings just to be called a geranium and nothing else? You wouldn't like to be called nothing but a woman all the time. Yes, I shall call it Bonny. I named that cherry- tree outside my bedroom window this morning. I called it Snow Queen because it was so white. Of course, it won't always be in blossom, but one can imagine that it is, can't one?"

"I never in all my life saw or heard anything to equal her," muttered Marilla, beating a retreat down to the cellar after potatoes. "She is kind of interesting as Matthew says. I can feel already that I'm wondering what on earth she'll say next. She'll be casting a spell over me, too. She's cast it over Matthew. That look he gave me when he went out said everything he said or hinted last night over again. I wish he was like other men and would talk things out. A body could answer back then and argue him into reason. But what's to be done with a man who just LOOKS?"

Anne had relapsed into reverie, with her chin in her hands and her eyes on the sky, when Marilla returned from her cellar pilgrimage. There Marilla left her until the early dinner was on the table.

"I suppose I can have the mare and buggy this afternoon, Matthew?" said Marilla.

Matthew nodded and looked wistfully at Anne. Marilla intercepted the look and said grimly:

"I'm going to drive over to White Sands and settle this thing. I'll take Anne with me and Mrs. Spencer will probably make arrangements to send her back to Nova Scotia at once. I'll set your tea out for you and I'll be home in time to milk the cows."

Still Matthew said nothing and Marilla had a sense of having wasted words and breath. There is nothing more aggravating than a man who won't talk back—unless it is a woman who won't.

Matthew hitched the sorrel into the buggy in due time and Marilla and Anne set off. Matthew opened the yard gate for them and as they drove slowly through, he said, to nobody in particular as it seemed:

"Little Jerry Buote from the Creek was here this morning, and I told him I guessed I'd hire him for the summer."

Marilla made no reply, but she hit the unlucky sorrel such a vicious clip with the whip that the fat mare, unused to such treatment, whizzed indignantly down the lane at an alarming pace. Marilla looked back once as the buggy bounced along and saw that aggravating Matthew leaning over the gate, looking wistfully after them.

The Titanic Disaster

Over 1500 lost on the 'unsinkable' ship's maiden voyage

The Titanic's maiden voyage from Southampton to New York has ended in a catastrophic loss of life in the icy north Atlantic. Within hours of colliding with an iceberg the greatest liner of her day sank below the waves, with the tragic loss of 1514 souls.

Built in Belfast for the White Star Line by shipbuilders Harland and Wolff, its owner, J Bruce Ismay claimed to have created a technological wonder. Nearly 300 metres long, and over 42000 tons, she was biggest passenger ship in the world. Her thick steel hull was divided into sixteen watertight compartments. If one compartment should flood, great steel doors would close it off, leaving the rest of the ship safe. Three enormous coal-burning engines would speed the ship across the ocean and the latest communication system, the Marconi telegraph radio, would keep her in contact with the world.

Inside, the Titanic was a floating palace, with ornate wooden panelling, beautiful furnishings and exquisite statues and paintings throughout all the public rooms. There were restaurants and theatres, dance halls and orchestras, and several swimming pools. The luxurious first class apartments were booked for this voyage by some of the richest people from England and America, intent on displaying their opulence to the poorer passengers cramped in third class cabins in the lower decks.

On the night of 14th April, four days after leaving Southampton to the cheers of thousands of flag waving well-wishers on the shore, the Titanic was speeding westwards through dark icy waters at 21 knots. A radio message from the German ship Amerika warned of dangerous icebergs, but the Titanic maintained her speed. At 11.39pm the lookout reported a huge iceberg looming ahead. The helmsman turned the wheel hard to port, the ship started to turn to the left but it was too late. The hard ice sliced through the hull and six compartments immediately began to flood with icy seawater. Very soon, Captain Smith realised the Titanic was doomed. His radio operator set an urgent SOS message which was picked up by the liner Carpathia but she was too far away to make a difference. Bow first, the Titanic slowly began to sink. Captain Smith gave the order to abandon ship. There was very little panic initially, but soon it became clear that there were not enough lifeboats to save everyone. "Women and children first!" was the order, as everyone scrambled towards the remaining life boats.

Less than three hours after the fatal collision, the stern of the Titanic, her propellers dramatically in view, slid beneath the freezing water. Over 1,000 passengers, most of them third class, from the lower decks, were still on board.

At first light the rescue ships began to arrive, but they found only 710 survivors. Many of them were women and children from first and second class. The last living survivor, Millvina Dean from England, who at only nine weeks old was the youngest passenger on board, died aged 97 on 31 May 2009.

Southampton was rocked by this disaster – most of the ship's crew came from this city and many hundreds of them had died.

Maths Reasoning 13

Write down the cost of each notebook up to £20.

The exact total can be determined by matching up the costs of A4 and A5 notebooks to exactly £20.

Number of each item	Cost of A4 Notebook(s)	Cost of A5 Notebook(s)
1	£1.90	£1.60
2	£3.80	£3.20
3	£5.70	£4.80
4	£7.60	£6.40
5	£9.50	£8.00
6	£11.40	£9.60
7	£13.30	£11.20
8	£15.20	£12.80
9	£17.10	£14.40
10	£19.00	£16.00
11	-	£17.60
12	-	£19.20

Using the table we can see that 8 A4 notebooks and 3 A5 notebooks cost exactly £20.

There is no other solution for this question.

Like Shapes

1. D - (The top right shape in the square moves to the bottom left and does not rotate. The bottom right moves to the top left and while it is unknown whether it rotates as it is a circle in the example, it must be D as the others cannot work regardless of rotation or not.)
2. B - (The first set of shapes is mirrored to form the second set. The mirror line has to be along the bottom side of the square as if you mirror the square along the top side, then none of the answers work. You can also say that the shape is rotated 180 degrees with the small left hand side shapes then moving to the right hand side and vice versa.)
3. A - (The row of triangles are rotated 180 degrees and the dotted shading changes to light shading and the light shading changes to dotted shading.)

Odd One Out

1. A - (All the shapes have the same number of stars as the number of sides of the large shape except A which has 4 sides and only 3 stars.)
2. D - (The difference isn't the number of arrows as it varies between 2, 3 and 4 nor is it the colour as there are 3 black arrows and 2 white. But in A, B, C and E the white arrows point to all black stars and the black arrows point to all white stars. Meanwhile D has black arrows pointing to three white stars and one black star.)
3. D - (There are the same number of wavy lines as triangles in all except D which has 3 wavy lines and 4 triangles.)

Rotations

1. B - (B is a rotation of around 135 degrees anti clockwise of the original.)
2. A - (A is a rotation of 180 degrees of the original.)
3. C - (C is a rotation of 180 degrees of the original.)

Code Breaker

1. D - (You can work out that X stands for the small pentagon shape as there are two of them. Therefore, Y stands for the star and the Z stands for the rhombus. All of the top letters are different and the only thing different between all of the squares is the position of the small shape within the square. So, E stands for being in the top right. So, the final answer is EZ.)
2. A - (You can work out that T stands for all three shapes being shaded as there are two of them. Therefore, U stands for two shapes being shaded and Y stands for none of the shapes being shaded. There are two Gs in the top letters and the similarity between the two is that the shapes are on the right hand side of the square. Therefore, F stands for the shapes being on the left hand side of the square. So, the final answer is FU.)

3. B - (You can work out that B stands for two trapeziums as there are two of them. Therefore, A stands for one trapezium and C stands for three trapeziums. There are two Ls in the second letters and the similarity between the two is that the shading is both black. K therefore stands for the shading being white. So, the final answer is CK.)

Missing Sequence

1. C - (As you move from left to right two changes happen each time; one circle disappears each time and the star rotates 45 degrees clockwise. So in the missing square there should be no circles and the star should be pointing down. So the answer is C.)
2. B - (The squares keep alternating with two changes each time. The arrow alternates between pointing up and pointing down and the dashed line inside the circle alternates between being a X and being a +. The missing square should have the arrow pointing up and the dashed line should be a + so, must be B.)
3. A - (As you move from left to right the bottom of the two segments with lines through it moves one segment anti-clockwise. The missing segment must therefore be in the bottom right and so the answer is A.)

Missing Square

1. B - (The left hand column all have trapeziums in them, the middle column rhombuses and the right column stars, the circles in the middle row are all shaded black. As the missing square is in the left column and middle row; it must have a black circle and a trapezium inside, so is B.)
2. B - (The left and right hand squares in the top row are both diamonds. The left and right hand squares in the middle row are both rhombuses but are mirrors of each other. The diamonds in the top row are symmetrical so you can't tell if it's a mirror. Using this pattern; the missing square on the right side of the bottom row should be a mirror of the left side so is B.)
3. E - (In each row, as you move from left to right the letters are rotated 90 degrees clockwise. So the missing square should be a rotation of 90 degrees anti-clockwise of the middle square in the bottom row. The answer is therefore E. Be careful of the thick line if you put B as the thick line should be on the left.)

Most Like

1. C - (In the two squares on the left there are three black shapes, one white and one lightly shaded in each. The only answer that has the same is C.)

2. D - (The two squares on the left both have a small shape at the top and a larger shape at the bottom. D is the only answer with a small shape at the top and a large shape at the bottom; so must be the answer.)
3. A - (The two squares on the left are both symmetrical down a horizontal line of symmetry through the centre. The only answer that is exactly symmetrical through a horizontal line of symmetry is A.)

Nets

1. B - (You can see from the cube that the bottom of the cross like sign lines up with the top of the © sign. The right hand side of the © sign also lines up with the left hand side of the π sign. From this information, you can see that the answer is B.)
2. E - (You can see from the cube that the right hand side of the e lines up with the right hand side of the E. The top of the E also lines up with the right hand side of the triangle. From this information, you can see that the answer is E.)
3. B - (You can see from the cube that the left hand side of the e sign lines up with the top of the d like symbol with the cross at the top. The right hand side of the d like symbol with the cross at the top also lines up with the left hand side of the p sign. From this information, you can see that the answer is B.)

3D Shapes

1. B - (In B you can see the three squares on the left hand side that line up with the three cubes on the left. You can then see that there is no cube in the bottom right that matches B but there is in the middle right. In B there is a square in the top right corner that you can't see in the question but at this point B is the only answer that works so it must be B.)
2. A - (You can see that A has rotated 90 degrees clockwise and then also been turned 90 degrees clockwise.)
3. C - (You can see that C has been rotated 90 degrees anti-clockwise and also been turned 90 degrees clockwise.)
