The Great Wall of China

The Great Wall of China, a true wonder of the world, was built more than 2,000 years ago. It is a series of fortifications made of stone, brick, tamped earth, and wood. Wider and taller than a house, it was built to protect the Chinese Empire from attacks from the Mongol tribes to the north. It winds, like a gigantic dragon, for over 5500 miles across deserts and grasslands and over mountains and hills. It is still there today and it can be seen from space.
The Emperor who wanted the wall built was cruel. He forced thousands of Chinese men to leave their homes and families to build it. Few returned home; most were worked to death.
This story about a lady called Meng-Jiang-nu tells us how much these people suffered:
Meng Jiang-nu lived happily with her husband, a builder. One day the Emperor's soldiers took her husband and marched him to the Great Wall where he was forced to work for many years. Meng had no idea what had happened to him, but when he did not return home, she decided that she must set off to find him.
She reached the Great Wall and found groups of workers, dirty, exhausted and starving. Soldiers were ordering them about and whipping those who did not obey. Meng met a worker who knew her husband but his news was tragic - her husband had died. She searched for his body, and the gods took pity and showed her where he lay. She wept. The next day the cruel Emperor came to inspect the wall. He saw Meng and decided he wanted her for one of his wives. He offered her a jewelled tomb for her husband if she would marry him. As soon as her husband had been placed in his tomb, Meng looked with hatred at the Emperor and threw herself off the wall into the raging river below. As she drowned, the gods changed her into a beautiful silverfish.

1. How long has the Great Wall been standing?

2. Why was it built?

3. How long is it?

4. Who ordered it to be built?

5. Who built it?

6. What was the high price of building the wall?

7. Why did the soldiers take Meng's husband?

8. How were the builders treated?

9. Who helped Meng find her husband's body?

10. What made Meng agree to marry the Emperor?

11. Why did Meng kill herself?

12. What happened to Meng as she was dying?
